He (PBUHA) would assist in the household chores and used to cut the meat... He used to tie a shawl on his stomach from Hupper Mungib Ale Mo'i Talabo

There are five things that I will never leave until my death: Eating on the ground with the slaves, riding on an unsaddled mount, milking the goat with my hands, wearing coarse woolen clothing and greeting the children - so that these (actions) may become a sunnah after me." The Prophet (PBUHA)
 Amali al-Sadug
 The Holy Prophet (PBUHA) used to salute the women and they would reply his salutation
 al-Kafi
 The Holy Prophet (PBUHA) used to patch his own clothes, mend his own sandals, milk his ewe, eat with the slaves, sit on the ground, ride a donkey and carry someone with him... He would never look down on what he was offered even if it was a dry date...
 Irshad al-Qulub

الله اعلم
 محمد صلى الله عليه وآله وسلم

He had few possessions, was kind by nature, sociable, cheerful, always smiling but without laughing, always sad, but without frowning, humble without being self-respect, generous without being extravagant, openhearted and merciful to every Muslim. He never belched out of being full and he never extended his hand (to something) out of desire (for it) -

When a small child would be brought to the Holy Prophet (PBUHA) in order to pray for blessings for him, he would take him in his arms so as to honor his family. Sometimes the child would urinate on him so some of those who saw this would give a loud cry. He would say: "Do not interrupt him until he has finished urinating." Then when he had finished praying for the child or naming him and his family, he would return him to his family, and they would not see signs of him being upset by the urine of their child. When they had left, he would wash his clothes.

 The Noble Prophet (PBUHA) would never take revenge from anyone, rather he would forgive and turn away
 al-Mustadrak
 The Holy Prophet (PBUHA) would usually sit facing the Qiblah.
 al-A'afiq
 When a person came to sit with the Holy Prophet (PBUHA) until the person stood he would inquire about him. If he would pray for him and if he was sick he would visit (and comfort) him.
 Makarim al-Akhdar
 From Anas who said: I served the Holy Prophet (PBUHA) for nine years and if he was not present (in the town) saying to me: "Why did you not enter the mosque?" I would enter the mosque. He would never recall him in a place, he would say: "The nearest available to me is at Kafi."

When something made the Holy Prophet (PBUHA) sad, he would take to prayer Majma' al-Bayan.
 He (PBUHA) socialized with the people by his good etiquette but was separated from them by his heart; his body was apparently with the people but his spirit was with Allah (i.e. Allah's) Majma' al-Bayan
 He would look with short glances (without staring), and he would not talk to anyone about a thing that he disliked... He would say: "The best from among you are those with the best akhlaq."
 He would neither criticize the taste of food nor praise it.
 Makarim al-Akhdar
 The Holy Prophet (PBUHA) would divide the young of him and if there were dates (dry or fresh) he would extend his hand (to take from it). When he would drink, he drank in three draughts, and he would drink water in sips and would not gulp it down.
 The Prophet (PBUHA) would salute the young and old al-Mustadrak
 When someone came to sit with him while he was praying, he would shorten the prayer and he would turn to him saying: "Do you need something?"
 al-Nuri
 The Holy Prophet (PBUHA) would never divide his attention between his work and his prayer. He would never leave his hands until the person left and he would never turn away a beggar - if he had something to give he would give it to him otherwise he would say: "May Allah bring it to you."
 al-Kafi
 There is not a believer who would give it to him and he would never bring it to you. The Holy Prophet (PBUHA) used to make jokes and he would say anything but the truth.
 al-Mustadrak
 He was never asked for a thing to which he replied: "No."
